

PLAGIARISM WARNING:

This is very important. When you use words from another person or publication in your writing, you are using a source that must be identified. If you use someone else's ideas that are not general knowledge, the source must be identified.

If you use someone else's words or ideas without giving proper credit, you are guilty of plagiarism, which means stealing someone else's work. Using three or more words in a row from another writer may constitute plagiarism. Changing around a few words or sentences will not protect you from plagiarism.

Plagiarism is considered scholastic dishonesty, and it is punishable under school district discipline rules. Plagiarism will result in a grade of zero for your paper.
